We in the north of Powys have already done our bit, and more, in hosting wind farms, and the presumption in favour of more such developments here is unacceptable. As it is, when you climb to the top of a local hill in order to savour the expanse of the landscape, you are confronted with a wind farm on top of almost every other bit of local upland that isn't forested. This is not what those of us who live here want to see, and nor, I am sure, do those many who come to spend their holidays (and their holiday cash) here. Enough is enough. Let's see more energy generated close to where it is needed, so that you in the south can share the burden of what you euphemistically term 'landscape change'. I think the word you were looking for was destruction, or at least degradation.
