National Survey for Wales: Cognitive testing of the April 2027 to March 2028 questions

Executive summary

Background

1.1 The National Survey for Wales is a continuous random-probability survey commissioned by the Welsh Government and three Welsh Government sponsored bodies: Sport Wales, Arts Council of Wales, and Natural Resources Wales. The survey provides nationally representative data on a wide range of topics important to policy makers including health, wellbeing, employment, public services, the environment, culture, sport, and community life.

1.2 Since its launch in 2012, the survey has undergone a number of methodological developments. Originally conducted face-to-face (CAPI) with some sections of the survey being delivered using Computer Assisted Self-Interviewing (CASI), the survey moved primarily to telephone mode (CATI) from 2020, with an online self-completion component (CAWI) introduced in 2021-22. As part of a wider redesign, the survey was paused during 2025-26 to support redevelopment work to redesign the survey for online mode (CAWI) for 2026-27, with paper (PAPI) and telephone (CATI) options available as alternative modes of completion.

1.3 Welsh Government commissioned NatCen Social Research to review and cognitively test questions proposed for inclusion in the 2027-28 National Survey. Cognitive testing provides an opportunity to explore how participants understand, interpret, and answer questions when completing the survey independently, helping identify any issues that may affect data quality, consistency of interpretation, or the participant experience.

1.4 The aim of this research project was to support the development of the 2027-28 questionnaire by reviewing draft survey questions, assessing the suitability of both previously asked and newly developed questions, and identifying any potential issues that could affect data quality, participant understanding or questionnaire completion. Through cognitive testing, the research then explored how participants understood, interpreted and answered the draft questions, with the aim of ensuring that questions and response options are clear to respondents and gather accurate data. The testing led to evidence-based recommendations to improve question wording, instructions, routing, and response options where required.

Methodology – desk review

2.1 To evaluate the proposed questions, NatCen first conducted a desk review. The desk review was undertaken by researchers from NatCen's Questionnaire Development and Testing Hub, who specialise in questionnaire design, survey methodology, and cognitive interviewing.

2.2 The desk review assessed 72 draft questions using the Question Appraisal System (QAS-99), a structured framework designed to identify potential sources of measurement error in survey questions. Researchers reviewed questions against eight criteria; reading, clarity, instructions, assumptions, knowledge and memory, sensitivity and bias, response categories, and other potential design issues.

2.3 For each question, researchers recorded any issues, documented the reasons why those issues were considered problematic, and developed recommendations where appropriate. Questions were then assigned a priority for cognitive testing based on the number and nature of issues identified and the extent of any suggested amendments. Findings from the desk review were used by NatCen and Welsh Government to agree a final list of questions for cognitive testing.

Methodology – cognitive testing

3.1 Cognitive testing was conducted across two rounds of interviews with a total of 24 participants. Interviews were carried out online via Zoom between June and August 2026. The iterative design enabled findings from Round 1 to be reviewed and discussed with Welsh Government before selected questions were revised and retested in Round 2 where necessary.

3.2 Participants were recruited by an independent recruitment agency Criteria Fieldwork Specialists, using purposive sampling techniques. Quotas were applied to ensure diversity in age, sex and highest qualification. Additional screening quotas were used where necessary to recruit participants with experiences relevant to particular modules, including dental history, gambling behaviour, experience of hearing problems and tinnitus, eye test history, and whether participants had young children.

3.3 During the interviews, participants were asked to answer survey questions and explain their thought processes using think-aloud techniques. Researchers used follow-up probes to explore how participants understood and interpreted questions, recalled relevant information, formulated responses and selected answer options. Questions were presented in two formats: a programmed online test version for two modules of the questionnaire with relatively complex question routing (Dental appointments and Gambling); and the remaining modules were shown as showcards images via screen sharing. This enabled NatCen researchers to assess both question performance and, where relevant, the functioning of questionnaire routing and navigation.

3.4 Findings from the cognitive interviews were analysed throughout fieldwork and were used to identify potential sources of misunderstanding, response error, and other questionnaire design issues. The findings informed recommendations for revisions to question wording, instructions, routing, and response options. The recommendations were discussed with Welsh Government after each round of fieldwork. In some instances, following discussions with the relevant research and policy teams if needed, Welsh Government decided on slightly different or additional responses to findings.

3.5 Table 3.5 summarises the modules reviewed during the project and indicates the stages at which they were included.

Round one cognitive testing findings

4.1 The first round of cognitive testing was completed with 12 participants and included questions from the following modules:

- Discrimination and bullying in the workplace
- Climate change - Views
- Community safety
- Dental appointments
- Eye care
- Fair work
- Gambling
- Hearing care
- Local environment quality
- Play
- Preparedness for emergencies
- Recycling
- Smoking and e-cigarette use

4.2 Overall, the cognitive testing findings showed that the majority of questions worked well. For example, the questions on Community safety, Local environment quality, Smoking, Discrimination and bullying in the workplace, Hearing care and Play performed well, and only minor or no changes were recommended. Participants were able to understand these questions, interpret key concepts consistently, and select appropriate responses without interviewer assistance.

4.3 Problems were identified with some of the questions during the first round of testing, particularly the questions on Recycling, Climate change, Preparedness for emergencies and Fair work. These mainly related to differences in how participants interpreted particular terms and concepts, including ‘extreme weather’, ‘charities’, and ‘kerbside recycling collection’.

4.4 In a small number of cases, there was some evidence that participants were uncertain about what certain questions were asking them to assess or lacked sufficient information or knowledge about a topic to answer confidently. For example, when presented with a question on climate change (CliChanResp) some participants were uncertain about how much responsibility charities should have for tackling climate change and therefore felt unable to make a clear judgement or select a response.

4.5 Changes and improvements were recommended based on these findings, including clarifying question wording and definitions, replacing potentially unclear terminology, improving instructions and response options, adding explanatory information or examples where required, and introducing an explicit ‘Don't know’ response option for some questions.

4.6 A subset of these questions were taken forward for further testing in Round 2 (e.g. Climate change, Dental appointments, Preparedness for emergencies, and Play). Some questions that worked well in Round 1, such as Smoking, were not tested further to allow for other questions to be tested.

Round two cognitive testing findings

5.1 The second round of cognitive testing was completed with 12 different participants and included questions from the following modules:

- Discrimination and bullying in the workplace
- Climate change - Views
- Community safety
- Dental appointments
- Eye care
- Fair work
- Gambling
- Hearing care
- Local environment quality
- Play
- Preparedness for emergencies
- Recycling

5.2 Overall, in the second round of testing the majority of questions worked well, and most of the changes made following Round 1 improved question performance. Participants were able to understand the questions, interpret key concepts as intended, and select appropriate responses with little difficulty. Many of the questions that had required clarification in Round 1 performed well in their revised form and no further changes were recommended.

5.3 The revised questions on Climate change and Preparedness for emergencies and worked particularly well. Clarifications introduced after Round 1, including additional definitions, revised wording and amended response options, generally improved consistency of interpretation and reduced uncertainty among participants.

5.4 Questions that were retested without any changes, including Local environment quality and Discrimination and bullying in the workplace, also continued to perform well in Round 2. Participants understood these questions as intended and no further changes were recommended.

5.5 Problems were still identified with some revised questions during Round 2 testing, such as Recycling, Gambling and Fair work. These mainly related to questions where participants were required to make subjective judgements or where local circumstances varied considerably. For example, some uncertainty remained around the interpretation of household recycling collection, frequency of different gambling activities, and whether certain fair work response options fully reflected participants' workplace experiences.

5.6 Further refinements were recommended for a small number of questions following Round 2, including Gambling, Recycling, Eye care and Fair Work. These included clarifying the intended interpretation of gambling frequency questions, improving the clarity of recycling response options, strengthening instructions for the question on eye care satisfaction, and further refining certain fair work questions to better capture a wider range of employment arrangements.

5.7 The tables in Appendix A show the wording of the questions that were tested in each round. The final column in each table shows the final version of the questions recommended to Welsh Government.
